

ORGZINE How the Government turned anti social media [1]

Monday, 15 August, 2011 - 22:00

[1]

Loz Kaye responds to David Cameron's potential idea of a social media block in 'emergencies'.

It is typical of this Government's approach to set out an unfeasible course of action, then expect others to implement it - in this case "the police, the intelligence services and industry ". It turns the police into passive observers and reactors, rather active participants working in a proportionate manner with communities. It was this that restored calm to our streets - not squaddies, bullets, or water cannon - and certainly not censorship. We need to look at root causes, not blame channels of communication.

Source:

<http://zine.openrightsgroup.org/...> [2]

Tags:

Leader [3]

Loz Kaye [4]

Social Media [5]

Censorship [6]

Source URL: <http://legacy.pirateparty.org.uk/orgzine-how-government-turned-anti-social-media>

Links

[1] <http://legacy.pirateparty.org.uk/orgzine-how-government-turned-anti-social-media>

[2] <http://zine.openrightsgroup.org/comment/2011/how-the-government-turned-anti-social-media>

[3] <http://legacy.pirateparty.org.uk/tags/leader>

[4] <http://legacy.pirateparty.org.uk/tags/loz-kaye>

[5] <http://legacy.pirateparty.org.uk/tags/social-media>

[6] <http://legacy.pirateparty.org.uk/tags/censorship>